plane.jpg Making travel arrangements can be a hassle, especially when booking flights. Oftentimes, picking an airport to fly into can determine vacation budgets, but luckily, Google's got it covered.

Instead of searching by destination, Google Flights Search now allows you to look up regions. The broader set of results lets users see various airports in the area, instead of focusing on a specific location. The web-based tool, launched in 2011, gives the option of booking flights based on your available range of time or budget.

Now, with its new feature, instead of typing in "London" and being automatically directed to a list of flights, you can enter "England, United Kingdom." A list of differ...
